Controlling your emergency workforce its a complex and often difficult task. Setting up teams of hundreds of workers in disaster-devastated areas and control their time sheets and activities it's a titanic endeavor that consumes resources that heavily adds up to the cost of the operation.

In average, 90 minutes of a workday are used for paperwork filling on the jobsite. This represents 42 hours a month for every employee/contractor just to fill in paperwork. Time that should be used for what you are actually paying for: work.

In an example where your company is paying $20 an hour per employee on a 100 people worksite, these 1.5 hours a day that are used for paperwork filling on a jobsite typically represents you a costs of nearly $255 per worker per week, (assuming a 10 hours' workday, 7 days a week. Overtime included). On a worksite with 100 employees/contractors using our app will represent savings of around $100.000 per month for that worksite only.

But direct labor cost savings –though great- are not the only advantage of our app. There are several steps on our app that offer our clients reassurance against possible future legal liabilities. Contractors/workers have to fill in our enrollment form and acknowledge on to a disclaimer that all the information provided is true. Also, once they are working, they will have to confirm through an automated email everyday their working hours, thus eliminating any discrepancies at payroll or future time. Transparent information available to all, all the time.
